No. 1.—OVERTURE.

WHAT enlivens proud Madrid, and makes her thus with gladness ring ?
Do the princes, knights, and people, hail the young awaking spring ?
How the hearts of all with warm enthusiastic feelings beat !
How they chatter, push, and drive, in ev'ry brilliant crowded street !
It was but a gipsy-maiden, who the art of magic had,
Who could make the fiery Spaniard soon be happy, soon be sad.
“ Preciosa, Preciosa,” from the lips of all is heard,
And her beauty is the theme of ev'ry song and ev'ry word.
E'en the greatest in the kingdom on the maiden's glances wait :
Don Francisco, Don Fernando, are rejoicing at the fate
Which attracts her to their garden ere the capital
she quits :
At a feast to do her honour many a guest admiring sits :
One alone, Francisco's son, the young Alonzo,
stands apart ;
That they lose her on the morrow makes him
heavy at the heart.
Hark ! the gipsies strike the cymbals, and the tambourine resounds !
Preciosa comes, the fair one, and a crowd her path surrounds.

ACT I.

No. 2.—GIPSY MARCH.

No. 3.—CHORUS.

Hail, Preciosa, Queen of Beauty ! On her brows
a garland place ;
Let the voice of praise be sounding to her fair and sunny face !
Hail ! good fortune on thee shower !
May'st thou know nor care nor sadness,
Thou, enrich'd by Nature's dower !
Crown her, sing her songs of gladness !

All men wonder, quite enchanted by the magic light which lies
Deeply hidden in, and gleaming from, the maiden's dusky eyes :
Till the mother of the gipsies, Viarda, smiling,
said the words,
“ Preciosa, child, thy rhymes perchance might please the noble lords.”
“ Yes, sweet rhymes now let her sing us, rhymes that tell of pleasures high,”
Said Fernando, “ pleasures found when on our mother's breast we lie.”
But Alonzo chid his friend, because he touch'd on joys of home,
Joys which fill the heart, yet such as to an orphan cannot come.
Preciosa stands alone, and from her eyelids starting, falls
Many a tear, while vanish'd days of happy childhood she recalls :

PRECIOSA.

Then with glances full of sadness at Alonzo,
softly sings
Heartfelt rhymes, the while she touches her guitar's clear-sounding strings.

No. 4.—MELODRAMA.

Preciosa.

Smiling sinks sweet eve around,
Songs of thankful joy resound,
Now, ere day gives place to night,
Households lovingly unite ;
All things look for welcome rest,
Seeks the child its mother's breast.
But outside these happy bands,
Sad and lone, the orphan stands :
Her no loving heart awaits,
Every storm upon her beats :
She through life forsaken goes,
Or attended but by woes.
On a sudden, kind, yet grand,
Shews a friendly face at hand,
Throbs her tender heart to see
One who may her hero be ;
All that she, in musing sweet,
Dreamt and hop'd some day to meet,
All for which she wept and pray'd,
He at last to her is made.
Yet can she no hope retain :
Speechless is her love, her pain,
Day by day his face to see,
Love him ever silently,
Part, and then forgotten be.
Scorn'd, proscrib'd, expell'd from home,
Friendless must the orphan roam ;
Her the world no mercy shews,
Feeling but its selfish woes :
Whither shall the outcast fly ?
Hopeless, madden'd, must she die ?
No, for kindly blessed Art
Serves to cheer her wounded heart ;
Music opes a golden door,
Winning her to weep no more ;
Song assuages bitter grief,
Gives the storm-toss'd breast relief,
Dries the welling fount of tears,
Bids depart her cares and fears.

By her feelings overcome, on Viarda's breast the maiden sinks,
Ev'ry guest, enraptur'd standing, on her song in silence thinks.
Then exclaims the gipsy mother, when she marks the working spell,
"Stay awhile, my Preciosa can your fortunes truly tell."
Preciosa looks, his fortune in Alonzo's face to seek :
"Trust me, all the lines I gaze on but of joy's fulfilment speak."

Next, Fernando's hand she seizes, his extended palm to scan :
"That which thou so long hast miss'd, to-day is newly born again."
Don Alonzo ponders long upon the clear prophetic word ;
Don Fernando with a ring rewards the forecast he has heard.
Then again the cymbals sounded, and the tambourine was played ;
For in dance by Preciosa must the day be brighter made.

No. 5.—BALLET.

No. 5A.—MELODRAMA.

Preciosa.

The hour is come for us to take our leave.
The crown of flowers which love for me may weave
The cruel hand of fate will pluck away ;
Yet in your thoughts I fain awhile would stay.
I go, this crowded world once more to join.
I look around, no fatherland is mine,
And therefore for a moment let me find
A friendly shelter in remembrance kind.
Ye flowers, fit image of unspoken prayers,
In light ye bloom, ye die 'mid worldly cares ;
Upon this breast prepare to meet your end.
The sunlight fades, and storms on me descend.
My heart, my grateful heart, will here remain ;
Farewell, Madrid, good fortune still retain.

ACT II.

When at length the sounds are silent, there appears, with solemn gait, Don Contreras, of Police the head, a Minister of State, Saying, "Now begone, you gipsies, for the time is quite run out, During which it is permitted you to linger hereabout." Then around their captain gather all the gipsies in a ring, And, by way of thanks and honour, all the knights begin to fling At the feet of Preciosa, fragrant bouquets, on the sand ; Yet to one, to one alone, she reaches forth her snowy hand. 'Tis Alonzo's gift of flowers which she seizes on with joy, Yes, Alonzo's, while the ready tear-drop trembles in her eye. Then once more she turns around, a last farewell of all to take : "Fare thee well, Madrid, we part, may joy thy people ne'er forsake."

So they leave the city, farther, ever farther marching on,
For the captain bids them follow till the forest-depths are won,
Till the night descends from heaven upon the weary earth below ;
And the hunting-chorus echoes as the gipsies onward go.

No. 6.—CHORUS OF GIPSIES.

The dells, the dells,
The green and shady dells,
Where echo dwells !

There sound both the horn and the hunting song
So gaily, the still forest-depths among.
Trara, Trara !

The night, the night,
The black and gloomy night !
Good friends, unite.

The wolves for the prey are in hiding anear ;
The bay of the hounds with affright they will hear,
Wauwau, wauwau.

The world, the world,
Our tent throughout the whole wide world
May be unfurl'd ;
While singing we wander, the air is resounding;
Each note from the dark rocky vale is rebounding;
Hallo, hallo.

Then the captain grasps a hammer, smites it thrice upon a stone :
“ Up, my comrades, stay no longer in this forest dark and lone.
“ To Valencia let us journey, for her wines are rich and rare ;
“ There is gold, too, for the seeking. Where is Preciosa ? Where ?
Then to him one answered, “ Captain, she has slept not all the night,
“ And is singing even now within the thicket out of sight :
“ Both Lorenzo and myself with horn and flute her notes prolong :
“ If thou hearken, thou thyself wilt hear the lovely distant song.”

No. 7.—SONG.

Preciosa.

Lonely am I now no longer,
For I see, in moonlight clear,
Sweet and mild, around me floating,
Thy belovéd form appear.

What I ponder, what I aim at,
What I know of joy or pain ;
Where I wander, where I linger,
Still wilt thou my heart retain.

Thou, that like the stars art shining,
Orbs that far above me roll,
Thou, so near, yet, ah ! so distant,
Fillest all my longing soul.

All are listening, when among them on a sudden there appears
One whom longing has constrain'd to follow, till his love he nears.
“ Don Alonzo ! ” “ Preciosa ! ” from the lips of each is heard.
By a deep and tender love the heart of each is newly stirr'd.
“ Follow me,” then cries Alonzo, “ be my wife, and follow me : ”
Preciosa answers, “ Here I stay. Thy wife ? It may not be.”
“ Well, if me thou wilt not follow, I with thee will gladly go ;
“ I will share thy weary journeys, till mine eyes no brightness know.”
By excess of joy impell'd, the maiden kiss'd him on the brow.
Ah ! a thousand-fold more sweet appears his resolution now !
Don Francisco thinks his son is at the wars, is gone to fight.
How a father's cares are trifled with by love's imperious might !
Then a welcome greets Alonzo, and the captain bids her go :
What it is to have such riches, Preciosa does not know.

(A short pause.)

No. 8.—GIPSY MUSIC.

What a bustling ! What a crowding ! What a sound of joyous song !
Preciosa's happy fortune gladdens all the gipsy throng.
“ Forwards, children,” calls the captain, “ to Valencia let us go :
But of what has happen'd here I charge you see let no one know.”
All prepare themselves for marching ; then, with rhythmic song and tread,
Forth the band of gipsies wander, through the world before them spread.

No. 9.—CHORUS OF GIPSIES.

The sun awakes,
His glory breaks
O'er valley and mountain side ;
O morning breeze,
O scent of trees,
O sunbeam in splendour dyed.

With cheerful song
The world along
We go, and we ask not where !
From place to place
We onward pass,
Unfetter'd, and free from care.
We seek a star
That shines afar,
To it we direct our gaze.
Preciosa, see,
We follow thee,
And none ever doubts, or stays.

ACT III.

Near Valencia, at the castle which is Don Fernando's home,
See, what crowds of country people to a merry feast are come.
'Tis a peasant-wedding bids them all in play and dance to join ;
While in brightly shining goblets sparkles clear the kingly wine.
Don Eugenio is present, Don Fernando's noble son, And with him the castle-steward, Pedro, full of mirth, looks on,
Limps about upon his wooden leg, and tells a hundred tales
Of the great retreat, and long on war's alarms and troubles dwells.
Dainty maidens, slender youths, with flowery garlands richly dight, Jest and dally with each other, or engage in dances light.
Hark ! the castanets are clapping, patriotic is their call :
" Stay awhile now, youths and maidens, there begins the peasant-ball."

No. 10.—SPANISH NATIONAL DANCES.

ACT IV.

No. 10A.—GIPSY MARCH.

At the merry wedding-feast full soon the gipsy band is seen : They had travell'd night and day through hollow vales and forests green. On a mule, uplifted high, rode Preciosa, proud and glad ; Don Alonzo at her side, but as a simple huntsman clad. Don Eugenio beholds the maid, and fain would win the prize ; Don Alonzo springs between them, jealous anger in his eyes ; And the pair begin to fight, until the peasants standing round Rush, and part them. Soon Alonzo in the castle-vault lies bound.

Preciosa, weeping, hastes to follow, hastes to seek her love, But the captain cries, " I warn thee, from this place thou must not move." From the nearest tree she tears a branch, as if to deal a blow On the captain for his warning, when he straightway turns to go. And meanwhile within the castle Don Fernando tries to bribe Viarda, pressing her to leave the place at once, with all the tribe. But Alonzo tells his father, who has come there over night, All his secret, asking pardon, pleading love's constraining might. In the garden, beat of tambourine proclaims the parting nigh : Knights and peasants all assemble, and unite in songs of joy ; And they drink, and shout for gladness, till the stars above them shine ; Hail to earth in all its beauty ! hail to love ! and hail to wine !

No. 11.—CHORUS.

The stars in their gladness are shining,
The darkness of life to dispel ;
They smile from the shadowy distance :
What light can their splendour excel ?

Like heaven is the earth also glowing,
With lamps that illumine the night ;
And they like the stars are inspiring
Our hearts with their festal delight.

But clearer than lamplight or starlight
The eyes of the lov'd one appear ;
No light that is earthly or heavenly
Is bright when her beauty is near.

We sing with tumultuous gladness,
For threefold the lights for us shine ;
This earth is to heaven surely changing ;
All hail unto love, unto wine !

Ever higher mounts the gladness, there is shouting, there is wine,
While unnumber'd hosts of stars in silver brightness earthward shine.

Don Fernando holds a feast, because a joyful day is come : He for five-and-twenty years has known a happy married home.

So the trees are hung with lamps, from ev'ry bough they glitter bright ; 'Twas the castle-steward, Pedro, who prepar'd their festive light. Then before the guests departed, once again 'twas counted meet That a song from Preciosa should the festival complete.

No. 11A.—GIPSY MARCH.

No. 12.—MELODRAMA.

Preciosa.

Heaven! where am I? What is here?
What the scenes which now appear?
When this beauty meets mine eyes,
Joyful hopes within me rise.
Rooms that glow with festive light;
Colonnades that glitter bright;
These are visions I have seen,
Dreams of things that once have been.

Donna Clara.

What so strangely moves me? say.

Preciosa.

Would I ne'er had seen the day.

Viarda.

Ev'ry word makes danger more.

Captain.

One word yet, and all is o'er.

Preciosa.

Up, and bid thy grief depart;
Rouse thyself, thou troubled heart;
Strings and voice, break forth, and still
All the bitter pain I feel.
Nay, I cannot, 'tis in vain,
Cannot sing a parting strain;
Though my voice the effort makes,
Yet my bleeding heart, it breaks!

Donna Clara.

Unhappy one!

Preciosa.

Woe is me, ah! woe is me!
Mine must ev'ry sorrow be;
I by Fancy's self at last
Into mere despair am cast;

Donna Clara.

Collect thyself, explain how—

Preciosa.

Fancy, who with kindly eye
Rais'd me oft from earth on high,
Me on magic arms upbore,
Till I reach'd Hope's golden door;
There for me a home appear'd,
As by magic art uprear'd;
All on which my heart did build,
All was in my dream fulfill'd;
For in vision I was press'd
To my lov'd one's tender breast;
There I found, my woes to end,
Father, mother, and a friend.

Donna Clara.

What a vision!

Viarda.

It must be!

Captain.

Come, Preciosa.

Preciosa.

Call ye me?

Yea, I come. Farewell! Forgive!
Here, yea here, I fain would live.

Captain.

Come, Preciosa. To Valencia!

Preciosa.

To Valencia!

Yea, and farther, ever farther!
Quench'd is Fancy's fitful glow.
As of old, my tears may flow;
Sorrow-laden, forth I go.
Well-lov'd places disappear,
Winds my greetings backward bear;
Breaks my heart—no friend is near.
"Ever thine," this word my last;
Up, up, to Valencia haste!

The Gipsies.

To Valencia! let us haste!

To Valencia! is the cry, while Don Fernando's wife protests,
"This young girl, so rich in virtue and in beauty, with me rests!"
Viarda answers, "Nay, but by what title this fair maiden do ye claim?"
Then with crafty smile approaches them the aged gipsy-dame:
"For a great reward I promise to inform you how we found
This same maiden in your country, while on travel we were bound.
Sixteen years have pass'd since then; 'twas spring,
'twas in the month of May;
What her name is, what her kindred, let this cross which deck'd her say."
With a gush of thankful joy sinks Don Fernando
on the breast
Of his child, and to the mother it is granted bliss to taste.
"Preciosa, dearest daughter!" is the parents' heartfelt cry;
Preciosa, full of rapture, is dissolv'd in tears of joy.
Don Alonzo at the moment in the circle shows his face,
And the parents, proud and happy, both their son and daughter bless.
Loud the joyful chorus echoes, while the stars in glory shine:
Hail, Preciosa, fairest maiden, for her brow a garland twine!

No. 13.—CHORUS.

Hail, Preciosa, Queen of Beauty! On her brows
a garland place;
Let the voice of praise be sounding to her fair and sunny face!

Hail! good fortune on thee shower!
May'st thou know nor care nor sadness,
Thou, enrich'd by Nature's dower!
Crown her, sing her songs of gladness!
