A Select List of Lee & Walker's Best Pieces for Piano.

EACH WITH HANDSOME, ILLUSTRATED TITLE.

Explanation of Marks and Degrees of Difficulty

The following immediately after the Key, indicates that the piece is without octave. Figure 1—Comprises the exact close of music, suitable for young beginners in the art. In the scale, both voice and piano parts are easy. Figure 2—Intermediate music, but advanced somewhat beyond figure 1, and is suitable for pupils in their second term. Figure 3—The music in this class is moderately easy, to be used by performers who have studied from nine to twelve months. The songs of this class are the light melodies now in general use. Figure 4—Moderately difficult music is comprised within this class, and will be found applicable to pupils of eighteen months, or two years' careful practice. Figure 5—For young performers this may be termed difficult, and is intended for those of over two years' study. The vocal portion of this class will be used by those who are enabled to sing the light ballads from Opera, or the modern German and English songs. Figure 6—in this class the music is of a more difficult nature than the previous figure and is for such pupils that have had the benefit of good tuition three or four years. The vocalist using music bearing this figure should have passed through a course of study in such works as "Nora's Vocal School," or "Cook's Method for the Voice," and other authorized works. Figure 7—The highest grade of difficult, and can be used only by the best performers and vocalist of decided executive ability. In this class we would only recommend carefully revised editions of "Chorus Proverbs," "The prompter," etc. Mendelssohn's songs without words, a "other classical works which we have endeavored to prepare in the most complete and correct manner possible.
