Robert Franz and his Songs

IN introducing to the public this collection of songs composed by Robert Franz, it seems to me that I can do no better service, either to the songs or the public, than to point out some of the essential features of the composer's art and present a picture of him in his attitude towards the music of his day and ours. The life-story of the man is neither large nor romantic, and will find better expression in a review of his artistic strivings than in a rehearsal of the plain and simple incidents which made up his career. It was, moreover, his strong desire to be known only through his artistic creations, and though he has not wanted sympathetic and affectionate historians, it is most noteworthy that there is little in the record which they have made of the kind which enters into what is commonly called biography. His private life was quiet, serene and uneventful, though burdened with the great affliction of deafness towards its close. He took no part in current polemics touching art, though his career compassed a period in which controversy was particularly angry and vociferous. He called himself a radical, but his radicalism was not that of his many contemporaries who thought, or professed to think, that progress demanded the destruction of the achievements of the past. In those achievements he recognized principles of artistic truth and beauty which to him seemed immutable and which, for that reason, should serve forever to vitalize all the manifestations that mark real artistic progress. He was, in fact, at once purist and radical, classicist and romanticist, reactionary and revolutionist. He believed that there was new wine in the music of his day, and that new wine should have new bottles; but he believed also that some old wine was good and that old bottles were suited to its preservation. He did not stand in the market-place proclaiming his wine, his bottles or himself. "Give heed to my songs," said he to Dr. Waldmann when his friend's questions took a biographical turn; "in them you will find written down the manner of man I was."

One circumstance which was the cause of much misunderstanding and some undeserved and even wicked reprobation a generation ago may need an explanation even now. The family name of the composer was not Franz, but Knauth. When this fact became known after the composer had become famous enough to stir up critical enmity, there were not wanting malevolent gossips who insinuated, when they did not flatly say, that Robert Franz had egotistically compounded his name out of the Christian names of Schumann and Schubert. Now the fact is that though his patronymic proved to be a peculiarly happy one after he had placed himself beside those masters in the realm of song, it had been assumed long before he dreamed of the lovely coincidence. He himself never answered to another name, though he did not take steps to acquire it legally until he had reached manhood. Christoph Knauth, his father, came of a family numerous in the vicinity of Halle, where the composer was born on June 28, 1815. For centuries the stock from which the composer sprang had followed certain occupations, enjoyed certain privileges, preserved certain peculiarities of dress and behavior, intermarried and developed traits which in a degree segregated them from the rest of the people of Halle. The Knauths followed the most ancient of the occupations of the community to which they belonged. This occupation was the production and sale of salt. Christoph Knauth belonged to the mercantile branch of the family; so did a brother, and some confusion having arisen in the delivery of letters which disturbed the fraternal relationship, an understanding was reached about 1800 to call the father of the composer Christoph Franz instead of Knauth. Neglect to have the change of name legitimized resulted in embarrassments to the son, who had never answered to another name than Robert Franz; and to avoid these he obtained royal sanction for the use of the name after he had grown to manhood and made a reputation which he thought worth protecting, and was about to take unto himself a wife.

Despite his indifference to that contemporary notoriety which is so often looked upon as fame, Franz had his Boswell, and to him students owe many interesting glimpses into the composer's intellectual life. This Boswell was Dr. Wilhelm Waldmann, who cultivated an intimate intercourse with him for ten years for the express purpose of noting down his utterances on subjects appertaining to his art, and preserving them for posterity. Franz knew the purpose and met his friend's questionings with entire candor. From Dr. Waldmann's little book entitled "Robert Franz. Gespräche aus zehn Jahren," it is possible to acquire accurate knowledge of the composer's mental and moral attitude toward most of the artistic problems of his day. Not voluminously, however. As has been said, Franz was not given to polemics. When he spoke it was with great positiveness, and as if the facts in each case were not open to discussion. There is no lack of self-appreciation in his utterances, and one need not be among his detractors to assert that his estimate of his predecessors and contemporaries in the song-field are as strongly marked by depreciation of the German lyrics which preceded his, as they are by exaggerated notions of his own originality, and the indubitable merits of his own works. Himself in every fibre a reflective composer, he did not always correctly value the charm of spontaneous and rhapsodic utterance in others. Beethoven's songs he compared to marble statues, perfect in form but cold and bloodless. He was even guilty of the utterly incomprehensible statement that he would rather hear "Adelaide" played on a clarinet than sung by a voice. He conceded warmth of feeling to Schubert, but thought him too predominantly a melodist. His melodies, he said, frequently go beyond the limits incited by the text, a single motive growing into a dramatic scene not at all called for by the poem. He found another cause of weakness in Schubert's art in his accompaniments, which, he said, were melody-accompaniments and nothing more. Such a judgment ought, of course, to have been qualified, and probably would have been had his interlocutor felt disposed, or been encouraged, to cite a few of the many instances to which the dictum could not by any stretch of the imagination be made to apply. There was a large personal equation in his estimate of Mendelssohn and Schumann, due to their attitude toward his creations and the attitude of their followers. He admired Mendelssohn not only for his individual genius, but also because of the admiration which he felt in common with him for Johann Sebastian Bach. It was Mendelssohn's organ-playing that made him ponder on the possible vocal effects of Bach's cantatas. He confessed that Mendelssohn's influence had been very potent for the purification of the popular taste in music; yet he believed that Mendelssohn had given him his approval only so long as he saw in him a disciple,—that is, a follower of his style; and he did not hesitate to say that it was due to the musical life of which he and Schumann were the inspiration that appreciation of his songs was long withheld in Leipsic, the city from which musical salvation was thought to issue three quarters of a century ago. "Dresel told me long ago," said Franz to Waldmann, "that Mendelssohn said there was no melody in my songs, and that remained a dogma a long time in Leipsic,—almost till now. So long as Schleinitz was alive, perhaps not a note of mine was sung in the Gewandhaus. One thing dates back to Mendelssohn and Schumann which did not exist before them,—the activity of the cliques. They led Mendelssohn and Schumann to compose things and do things which they never would have been guilty of of their own volition. Therefore they were accepted and lauded by their partisans." Franz met Mendelssohn first at the house of a mutual acquaintance in Halle. He describes the incident to his faithful chronicler: "I showed him my Op. 1 ('Twelve Songs'). He was pleased, and played on the pianoforte his melody 'Auf Flügeln des Gesanges' and the melodies of Nos. 1 and 3 of my Op. 1, woven into a fantasia, wonderfully. Yes, he was a great artist. My Op. 1 (not Op. 2), and Op. 3 even more, have in them something that looks as if I intended to follow in his footsteps, and thus far he was in agreement with me; but from Op. 4 on he let me drop. It was all over with me when he found that I did not intend to carry his train. Schumann went with me as far as Op. 11; then he saw that I was not travelling his road, and wanted to know nothing more of me.... My songs will live longer than Mendelssohn's. It is singular how these things are worn out by excessive use. In passing through the hands of every shoemaker and tailor some of the grime which such people have on their hands clings to them; their brilliancy is dimmed, we do not like to hear the songs any more." Yet he admired in Mendelssohn's music the very element which he ranked highest in his own,—style, as exemplified in clarity of form. "You know that I value Liszt very highly," he remarked to Waldmann, "but that has nothing to do with his compositions; and neither he nor I will ever compose a 'Midsummer Night's Dream' overture." He stoutly resented the charge that he was an imitator of Schubert and Schumann. They being his predecessors, he admitted that he had studied their achievements and tried to emulate them in their excellences while trying to avoid their errors. "I shall take good care not to copy the mystical and paradoxical things in Schumann," said he, and he faulted Schubert severely for his lack of discrimination in the choice of poetical texts. He held that, though correct declamation was an essential thing in song-writing, Schumann had brought it too much into the foreground, to the forgetting of the purely musical element, to which he himself clung. "One must have a clear conception of the words," said he, "then rhythm and declamation will follow of their own accord."

Franz called himself a radical in music. "As regards my attitude towards the music of to-day," said he on an occasion, "I am not only progressive but radical, wholly radical. This does not mean that I should like either to change or eliminate a single note either of Bach's or Handel's. No; but I am radical in relation to the music of to-day." In view of such an attitude, and the fact that Liszt and Wagner were among the earliest admirers of his songs, it is not strange that the champions of the new tendency half a century ago hailed Franz as one of themselves and insisted on making of him one of Wagner's camp-followers. They were helped in this not a little by the circumstance that criticism of his songs came chiefly from the ranks of what Franz and his friends always dubbed the Mendelssohn and Schumann clique. It is not easy to-day, when principles, more than feelings, are subjects of discussion, to point out wherein the extreme radicalism professed by Franz himself consisted; still less the great bond of union between his songs and the music of the great musical dramatist of the nineteenth century. Franz himself seems to have been unable to go further than to point out the intimate relationship which exists between the words and music in his songs and Wagner's dramas. But, surely, however it may have appeared to the heated minds of the controversialists fifty years ago, this is nothing novel. In principle Wagner was not a whit in advance of the inventors of the monodic art-form out of which grew the Italian opera three hundred years ago. Quite as much as he, they declared that melodies adapted to the words of a drama should grow out of the words, be united to them, as Weber once said, in a kind of "angelic wedlock." It is a great charm in Franz's songs that the melodies seem to rise from the poems like an exhalation, but there have been such melodies ever since the art of music outgrew its period of sterile formalism. There were such, indeed, before the artistic song had been invented. Franz's romanticism was rooted in the old German folk-song, and this was as truly an emanation of emotionalism, and the eloquence inseparable from natural poetic expression, as the most finished of the products of Franz's highly sophisticated muse. Franz was proud of Wagner's fondness for his songs, and more than flattered when on a visit which he made to Zurich the revolutionary refugee opened his bookcase to show his visitor that, save the scores of Bach and Beethoven, his songs constituted the entire musical library possessed by the dramatic master; but when the controversy about the "Music of the Future" began to rage, Franz strongly resented the attempt to range him among the Wagnerites,—so strongly, indeed, that there was no continuing friendship between the two men. "There should be an end to the comparisons between myself and Wagner," he said to Waldmann; "we are diametrically opposed to each other. There is no significance in the fact that we approach each other in principle as regards the reproduction of the text in music." At another time: "Look at Schubert's song 'Die Rose.' There you'll find the Lohengrin motive 'Mein lieber Schwan,' very plain; and my son called my attention to the fact that in my song 'Wiedersehen,' Op. 51, there is a recitative passage which is the fate motive from 'Die Walküre.' But this Op. 51 was composed by me in 1844. So long did it lie in my writing-desk; not a soul saw it, nor did Wagner,—yet it's the motive. Now somebody will come and say I copied Wagner. Why should we not once have hit upon the same thing? I have said to you before that words and music are merged in each other in my songs, the music growing out of the text, so to speak; that, too, is Wagner's principle. There is another reason for our differing forms, for if we were to treat the same subject my work would not look like his. It rests on this: Wagner is highly gifted naturally,—as poet, painter, musician; no side of him was specially favored in his education, and hence he was drawn in different directions. To this must be added his years of life as conductor in small theatres and association with bad music until his talent made its own channel. He has tremendous will-power. In his writings he is too comprehensive, proving again that he is not led by music alone, but fascinated also by other subjects." Again he said: "Wagner was an honest, open, straightforward character. He proclaimed his wants, made no concealment, and—you must not misunderstand me—I never quarrelled with him. He wanted an army of followers, and because I could not persuade myself to join it, it was all over with me. We never had anything to do with each other afterwards." Wagner was in all things a dramatist; Franz in all things a lyricist. The view which Wagner took of songs was one with which Franz could have no sympathy. "When I was with Wagner in Munich," Franz relates, "he sang and played a few of my songs,—'Widmung' and 'Ja, Du bist elend,' the latter was his favorite. But how did he sing them? He declaimed them, with extravagant pathos, dramatically. 'You must write operas,' he called out to me; but whoever has looked a little deeply into my songs knows that the dramatic element in them is nil; and it ought to be so."

I make no doubt that it was the unbridled dramatic tendency of all composers except those of insipid love-songs sixty years ago which made Franz believe that the lyrical feeling had died out of music, and that his songs alone were keeping alive the spark which had glowed resplendently in Schubert and Schumann. He thought that the bombastic style of dramatic utterance had killed the feeling for which he had to hark back to Handel and Bach. The former was his particular model in the treatment of the voice. Handel, if anybody, he said, understood the bel canto of the Italians, and it was because he had taken his vocal style as a model that Garcia had said that of all German songs Franz's were best adapted to the singing voice. Bach was his model not only for the instrumental part, but for much else. From Bach Franz learned the value of symmetry, of orderly, logical organic development,—this latter principle being so dear to him that he was willing to sacrifice that which he considered of prime importance in song-composition, correct and truthful declamation, when the verse-structure compelled a compromise for the sake of the music. "Note this about my songs," said he to Waldmann; "every one has an introduction, a middle and then a point (climax). Many composers set the words as they stand, and make shipwreck at the close because the words there often demand something entirely different from what has been prefaced. My songs already disclose in the beginning, that is, in the first part, where they are to come out;—the conclusion is prepared." And again: "Note this: In Bach, Beethoven, and my songs, you will always find that a certain motive forms the basis of the composition. In this motive, however, the position of every note is important. The motive must be capable of development, so that something can be built upon it." Later he recurs to the same idea: "The foundation of a song is generally a motive which corresponds in character with the contents of the text. Out of this the entire song develops itself. Of course such a motive must have a content; it must be musical so that something can be made of it." Pursuing the methods of Bach, which, no doubt, were enforced upon him by the strict, old-fashioned training which he underwent at Dessau, Franz naturally conceived a love for rugged harmonic sequences, and acquired that mastery of the art of expressive dissonance which is characteristic of him. From Bach, too, he might have learned, had it been necessary and had he wished, the use of delineative device as it appears in his songs. In some cases the device is purely external, a frank imitation of nature; in others the pictorial suggestion is symbolical, calling for an exercise of the imagination where the former cases appealed directly to the fancy. All close students of Bach must know how plastic all manner of delineative devices were in his hands, and how readily they lent themselves there to his strict constructive methods. Franz, too, knew the value of these devices. By his own confession he wanted his singers and hearers to perceive the picture of a mountain in the first figure of "Nebel" (Op. 28, No. 4); to hear the song of birds in "Im wunderschönen Monat Mai;" to feel the movement of water in "Auf dem Meere;" to note the fluttering of birds' wings in "Liebliche Maid," and the birds' song as well as a picture of the hills in his setting of the German version of "Ye Banks and Braes of Bonny Doon." In "Umsonst" he conceived the reiterated tone A as the primal tone of all nature, echoing here a notion like that of the Chinese musical philosophy which sets forth F as the musical symbol of the universe. The syncopation in "Thränen" he meant to be felt as the convulsive beating of the heart, like a similar effect in the third act of "Tristan und Isolde."

Other examples may be left to the discovery of the individual student.

From the little book by Dr. Waldmann, I extract a number of utterances about some of the songs which may prove useful to those who are to sing as well as those who are to hear the songs gathered together in this collection. Franz was unwilling that his songs should be judged by the merit or demerit of individual details in each. He wanted not only that a song should be judged as a whole, but also that the students of them should study them all in order to penetrate into the spirit of his settings. "One ought not to seize upon details in my songs," said he to Waldmann, "and subject them to examination. You would not consider a statue beautiful because of the peculiar beauty of a leg or an arm, but because the whole is beautiful. My songs, too, must be considered as wholes." In this spirit he answered a criticism by Reissmann. "A book by Reissmann on rhythm has recently appeared, but I do not want to read it. I hear, however, that he is after me with sharp criticism again and cites the song 'Aus meinen grossen Schmerzen' [p. 6]. He has italicized the word 'Aus,' and faults me for having accentuated it, though I could do nothing else. 'Out of my great sorrows I make the little songs'—it is all a matter of course. If I had accentuated 'my' it would have been fundamentally wrong, for the antithesis lies in 'great' and 'little' and these alone were the words to receive stress. After all, the accentuation of single words is a side-issue. It is seldom that a musical phrase can be reformed, for the sake of a significance, without destruction. Musical content is the principal thing, not the accent on this or the other word." "Willkommen, mein Wald" [p. 157]: "Now see how things go: Kretschmar praises my strength in passionate things and in forceful outbursts of deep and shattering feeling; others deny me the possession of any feeling whatever and praise the songs which Kretschmar criticizes. The song, 'Willkommen, mein Wald,' which Kretschmar praises, is one of my weaker ones, and I was long in doubt whether or not to print it." "In 'Ständchen' [p. 129], the 'prangen' must not be shouted out; 'prangen' and 'funkeln' [glittering and twinkling] is not the principal business of the poem, but the fact that the stars are weary of glittering and twinkling. But what matters this in my small things. Look at Bach. All his music is symbolical. If you come across the word heaven you may be sure that the tones will ascend on high; if he speaks of death they will as surely go down. In his great Mass in B minor such things pepper the pages. In the 'Crucifixus' there is a constant reiteration of a single figure, as if one saw the cross building up before one. In one of his cantatas the words tell of big and little fishes; the violins above imitate the little tail-movements, the basses below the big. Such things are found everywhere in Bach."—"Stille Sicherheit" [p. 125]: "Have a care not to play the middle part too rapidly." "Umsonst" [p. 136]: "One of the best of my songs. The recurring A [A-flat in this collection] indicates that the whole world is tuned to A. A is the first tone in the scale, not C. One does not know whether to weep or be jubilant in this song." "Zwischen Weizen und Korn" [p. 96] "must be sung with particular lightness, with correct accent on the words, a recitative style. The sixteenth-notes must not be sung stiffly." On one occasion Dr. Waldmann asked Franz if he never felt himself moved to compose duets. Franz answered: "No; if a duet is to give expression to something that it ought to express, that is, agreement of feeling touching a situation by two individuals,—it must not be a mere caterwauling,—it can be written only in the old style of Bach and Handel, who wrote the most beautiful duets in existence. Here there is not merely a companionable movement of the voices in sixths and thirds, as in Schumann, and particularly in Mendelssohn; no—each voice has complete freedom of movement, complete independence and individuality. But it would be risky to apply this old form in our day. I have never felt myself impelled to write duets; but look at Op. 31, No. 4 [p. 120]:

Sie liebten sich beide, doch keiner

Woll' es dem andern gesteh'n.

Here, besides the voice-part, you hear as it were a second, an ideal voice in the accompaniment." The tenor singer Walther had sung "Mädchen mit dem rothen Mündchen" [p. 98] in Vienna and achieved but little success. Franz comments: "That 'Mädchen mit dem rothen Mündchen' did not please does not surprise me at all. There is in general no understanding of the concise forms. Unless there is a sharply defined, prominent melody in a song it is not for the public; they do not grasp harmonic treatment even if the melody occasionally participates in the harmony."—"I asked him for the tempo of the song," relates Waldmann; "he sang it and by no means in a rapid tempo, but Andantino con moto, as it is marked." "One of my best songs is 'Die Lotosblume' [p. 26]. These first songs [it is No. 25 of Op. 1] are more fantastic in spirit than the later ones; afterward nature asserts herself—the birds sing, forest and mountain and valley, the sea, the brook, Spring—everything is there." Franz would never endure a transposition of his songs, which were all written, as he himself said, for a mezzo-soprano voice. Protesting against the practice of transposition he said: "From a technical point of view, too, my songs must be left as they were composed. In 'Im Herbst' [p. 80], for instance, the right hand sounds C and D simultaneously with the thumb, then A-flat, an octave higher, C and D with the second, fourth and fifth fingers. If I wanted to play the song a tone lower, i. e., in B-flat, it would be nonsense, impossible. It may be possible to transpose songs, the accompaniments of which are only harmonic stuffing; not mine." A singing-teacher wrote Franz that she had heard "Im Herbst" sung at a concert, and the singer had sung the words "und die gramvolle Zeit" very piano. She thought the reading wrong, and asked the composer's opinion. Franz said to Waldmann: ". . . has evidently discovered a mare's nest and is proud of her wonderful find. 'Gram, Gram,' that surely ought not to be shouted. I wrote the teacher to sing ————— as written; there is no piano; as if 'Gram' [Woe, in this edition of the song] could not have passionate and violent expression. The entire content of the song must be studied. I composed feelings, not words. Wagner is to blame for all this. Whenever a word with a changed meaning occurs, there is a change, too, in the music."—"Auf dem Meere" [p. 4]: "The figure,—rocking motion of the sea."—"Nachtlied" [p. 106]: "That is difficult; nothing but moonlight must rest upon it."—"Mein Schatz ist auf der Wanderschaft" [p. 100]: "Tapp, tapp, tapptapp,—there he is tramping away from home." "Die stille Wasserrose" [p. 36]: "After I had composed the song I thought to myself: 'Well, that is nonsense,' and laid it aside. Only after a long time, when it accidentally fell under my eye, did I look it through and discover that it is a charming song."—"Im Rhein, im heiligen Strom" [p. 83]: "In Schumann the declamatory element comes too much into the foreground. I always strove to reproduce the text musically as I comprehended it. Compare the songs which both of us composed, 'Im Rhein,' etc.; Schumann painted pointed arches and columns, but that is not the chief thing—it is the picture of the Virgin."

Abends.
At Evening.

Op. 11, No. 6.
Original key D minor.

Andante con moto.

The musical score consists of three systems of music. The top system shows the vocal line and piano accompaniment. The vocal line starts with a melodic line over a piano bass. The lyrics are: "O läch - le, Freund der Lie - be, Once more, oh friend of lov - ers, Die Begleitung durchweg leise, aber gut betont. The accompaniment light throughout, but well accented." The middle system continues the musical line with lyrics: "end - lich wie - der zu mir her - ab; du siehst so trü-be auf mein smile thou glad - ly On me in — gloom, Thou gaz - est thro' my window". The bottom system concludes the piece with lyrics: "Fen - ster nie - der, wie auf ein Grab. O now so sad - ly As on a tomb. Oh". The piano part features sustained notes and chords throughout the score.

^{}) Hitherto this song has always appeared under the title “The Lotos-flower” (Die Lotosblume). However, this is doubtless attributable to a slip of the pen on the composer’s part, for Geibel’s celebrated poem is entitled “The quiet Water-lily” (Die stille Wasserrose). This inadvertence has finally been set right in our edition.

The musical score consists of four staves of music for voice and piano. The top two staves are for the voice, and the bottom two are for the piano. The vocal parts are in common time, while the piano parts are in 2/4 time. The key signature is B-flat major throughout. The vocal parts are written in soprano clef, and the piano parts in bass clef. The score includes dynamic markings such as espressivo, mf, and con pedale. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves, corresponding to the musical phrases. The piano parts feature harmonic support with sustained notes and chords.

Op. 5 № 2.

Original key A major.

Andantino grazioso.

The musical score consists of four staves of music for voice and piano. The vocal line is in soprano C-clef, and the piano accompaniment is in bass F-clef. The score is in common time, with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The vocal part begins with a melodic line consisting of eighth and sixteenth notes. The piano accompaniment features sustained chords and rhythmic patterns marked with 'p dolce' and 'pp'. The lyrics are integrated into the musical phrases, with some words appearing below the staff. The vocal line continues with a melodic line, and the piano accompaniment provides harmonic support. The vocal part concludes with a melodic line, and the piano accompaniment provides harmonic support.

In Volkston. In modo popolare.

Op. 26, No. 2.

Original key G minor.

The musical score consists of five staves of music for voice and piano. The vocal line is in soprano range, and the piano accompaniment is in basso continuo style. The music is in common time, with a key signature of two flats. The vocal parts are written in soprano clef, and the piano parts in bass clef. The score includes lyrics in both German and English, with some words underlined. The piano part features bass notes and harmonic support, with dynamic markings like mf, p, and cresc. The vocal line follows the piano's harmonic lead, with melodic phrases and expressive markings.

Op. 33, No. 6.

Original key E major.

The musical score consists of six staves of music for piano and voice. The piano part is in the basso continuo style, providing harmonic support with sustained notes and rhythmic patterns. The vocal line is lyrical, with melodic phrases and dynamic markings like f (fortissimo) and p (pianissimo). The lyrics are in German, with some words in English, set to a 12/8 time signature. The vocal entries are marked with 'Rec.' (Recitation) and asterisks (*) indicating where the piano part continues. The vocal part includes the following lyrics:
