Preface

The only source for “In Yonder Grove” is the volume The Posthumous Vocal Works of Mr. Linley and Mr. T. Linley, a collection of compositions by Thomas Linley Sr. (1733-1795) and Thomas Linley Jr. (1756-1778) published around 1800.³ “In Yonder Grove” has previously been attributed entirely to Linley Jr. based on a report in The Early Morning Chronicle from 1773, which also attributes the words to his sister, Elizabeth Linley.⁴ It is now apparent, however, that at least some of the cantata must have been written by Linley Sr., given that the air “If thy too cruel bow be bent” appears in his opera “The Royal Merchant”, which premiered in 1768 (when Linley Jr. would have been twelve years old).⁵ This also calls into question the authorship of the text, which (for this particular air) is the same in both “The Royal Merchant” and “In Yonder Grove”, the text for the former written by a certain Mr. Hull.⁶ Regardless of authorship questions, “In Yonder Grove” remains a wonderful example of late 18th-century English cantatas.

In preparing this edition, certain editorial decisions have been made purely on the basis of style, context, and good judgement, given that there are no other available sources. Idiosyncrasies or errors in dynamics have been corrected and notated in brackets. When a dynamic marking is present in some parts but omitted in others where it is clear that the dynamic applies to the whole ensemble, it has been also added in brackets. Original dynamics such as for or po have been modernised. Regarding lyrics and text (including indications in the score), all original punctuation as well as capitalisations, abbreviations, and spellings have been maintained. All added text is in brackets. In many places, additional accidentals already covered by the key signature are notated in the source. These have been, for the most part, omitted. Original articulation markings and ornaments have been maintained; editorial articulations have been added in brackets, and added slurs have been written as dotted lines.⁷ Original note beamings have been maintained, including abbreviations (e.g., a half note with a slash through the stem instead of four eighth notes). Original score order has also been maintained. Indications of unison in the violin parts have been written out. Errors of notation have been corrected and are marked with a number referring to a note in the critical apparatus at the end of the score.

“In Yonder Grove” consists of beautifully flowing accompanied recitatives, two airs (one with solo oboe and solo cello and the other, a rondeau, with solo oboe, probably played by the young
