I HAD A LITTLE GARDEN.

LAWRENCE HANRAY.

WRITTEN, COMPOSED AND SUNG BY

Author's Excuse. What I may call the horticultural ballad is very popular just now; it is really about roses, but in the following unique composition I venture to recognise the claims of several other equally deserving flowers, fruits, and vegetables.

I HAD A LITTLE GARDEN.

I had a little garden, a pretty little thing
Which used to sleep the winter through and wake up in the Spring
I had a little garden, with flowers rare I set it
And then one night when all was still
The cat got in and eat it!

There were violets and violins and vile things of many kinds,
Tiger lilies, water lilies and piccalillies too
French beans, broad beans Bile beans for biliousness,
Lots of han(d)som(e) cab-bages and turnips not a few
Green peas, split peas M.P's and other kinds,
Every sort of Berry (or cremation if preferred)

Blue-bells, dumb-bells, dinner-bells;
A model of a garden you can take my word.
There was celery and Pommery , and Heid-sieck and other brands
Yellow aster, China aster, Waldorf Astor too,
Fig trees, plum trees, Hawtreys and Beerbophm Trees,
Water-cress and whiskey cress, I leave the choice to you.

Onions, bunions, corn-flower and arrow-root,
Marigolds and marriages, divorces too as well,
Moss-rose, dog-rose, cat-rose, bloater roes,
Everything that grows on earth and ought to grow – in the other place!

I had a little garden and countless yards of hose
Which used to give me shower-baths and spoil my pretty (well-cut) clothes!
I had a little garden, a motor car one day
Looked in and breathed on it, and it faded quite away.
