4. When I lived in apartments,
 Just as young men often do,
 My landlady she took to me,
 She took my whiskey too.
 She'd powers of speech beyond my reach,
 And shouted, on the landing,
 Most rude remarks about my bill,
 Prompt settlement demanding.
 She was very much attached to me,
 Very much attached to me;
 I tried to leave her unaware,
 But let my box fall on the stair,
 And felt, when she grabbed me by the hair,
 She was very much attached to me.

5. One evening I met a girl,
 With jet-black eyes so fine,
 I stole up to her side and said
 I wished that they were mine.
 'Twas in the park, and getting dark,
 When I made that confession,
 She smiled, and soon two jet-black eyes
 I had in my possession.
 They were very much attached to me,
 Very much attached to me;
 A fellow, her husband, came in view,
 He put up his fists and he went one, two,
 And a beautiful pair, before I knew,
 Were very much attached to me.

6. To cure a cough one day I put
 A porous plaster on,
 And soon was much relieved to find
 My cough completely gone.
 That being so, I said, "What ho!
 I now can do without it,"
 I didn't know how to take it off,
 But a friend knew all about it.
 It was very much attached to me,
 Very much attached to me;
 He went like this in a style so gay,
 Some of it went where the skin gave way,
 And the rest will be useful, I hope, some day,
 For it's very much attached to me.

7. I used to think I'd like a bird,
 To fondle and protect,
 Last week I got one in a way
 I didn't quite expect;
 With aim so true, some person threw
 Something in my direction,
 It was a chicken, in the egg,
 I found on close inspection.
 It was very much attached to me,
 Very much attached to me;
 I don't know yet how it occurred,
 But for a week, upon my word,
 The odour of that "might-be" bird
 Was very much attached to me.
